Living For God IS Possible Today

Author Uses Devotional To Show How

Djibouti, Africa—According to the Barna Group (research corporation), only four percent of Christians have a biblical worldview. That could explain why so many young adult and adult Christians still accept pre-marital sex, biblical illiteracy and conforming to popular culture as part of their everyday lives.

In her devotional "A Quiet, Bold, Right Life: Devotionals for Young Adults and Adults", (Author of Faith Enterprises) author Afi (pronounced Ah-fee) Pittman shares what she learned as a young, single, Christian woman about relationships, finances, God, romance and work in a non-judgmental and encouraging fashion. Each devotional ends with questions or statements that prompt the reader to think about how they can practically apply the provided scripture to their own life.

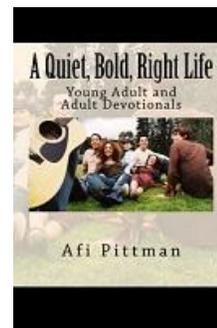

"So much of my own life was spent trying to live up to standards God never created. I decided that while I was still a young adult, I was going to commit my life to God." Afi explains. "As a result, my relationship with God has changed every area of my life. I'm still a work in progress, but chasing after God and His purpose for my life has made me a new woman."

Based off 1 Thessalonians 4:11 – 12, "A Quiet, Bold, Right Life" challenges its readers to embrace living the "quiet life" that proves that the Word of God is relevant, right and applicable even today.

Afi Pittman is the CEO of Author of Faith Enterprises:
